

Framing Subjects

In this lesson, we'll be taking a look at
Framing Subjects.

Estimated Completion Time: 8 minutes.

Framing Subjects

Framing is a technique whereby naturally occurring elements are used to frame the subject.

This helps draw attention to the subject, adds depth, and generally makes the image more pleasing.

The frame does not have to completely frame the subject - in this case, the sunset - but the foreground elements help add interest and add depth to the image.

Framing Subjects

Here the foreground elements add interest and depth to the photograph.

Framing Subjects

Just a touch of a 'frame' can make a shot more interesting.

Framing Subjects

Once again, a blurry, hint of a frame adds some depth and interest to the shot.

Framing Subjects

Framing Subjects

A rather more complex frame in this image also adds depth to the image. 'Zooming In' also helps add the depth here, by blurring some of the frame.

Framing Subjects

A nice colorful frame.

Framing Subjects

Leaves frame the moon.

Framing Subjects

Here trees frames the sunset colored clouds.

Framing Subjects

Leaves frame the galah.

Framing Subjects

Framing Subjects

Methods to frame subjects can be found everywhere.

Framing Subjects

Framed by branches.

Framing Subjects

Doorways and windows also are great ways to frame people.

Framing Subjects

Framing Subjects

You've now completed this lesson.

In this lesson, we took a look at
Framing Subjects.